A toolkit with suggestions on how to talk to siblings about autism

Explaining autism to a sibling can be challenging for parents. We have prepared this toolkit to assist you in starting the conversation with your child.

Here are some things you consider when beginning a conversation with your child.

- Find out what your child may already know (or think they know) about Autism. “Do you know what autism is?”
- Speak factually about autism and focus on positive language.
- Discuss and dispel any “myths” they may bring up about autism.
- Use age-appropriate language.
- Be prepared to repeat yourself and revisit the conversation often.

For more information about what is available in your region, connect with your local autism organization to see if there are other resources, guidance, and support.
